MOVING TO A DIFFERENT COUNTRY

Is a decision that a lot of people make for different reasons. It can be an economic reason or a social reason or for school. Is even more difficult if you are obligated to leave your country for any reason but nowadays it is not very often, usually people leave their country looking for a new life, find a new job, make new friends, and so on.

Let's start with the "new job", finding a job can be really difficult even more if you move to a city that is really competitive, and usually you have to have previous experience. Or maybe you move because you already have an offer for a job. You have to know (before moving) the minimum salary and the minimum hours of work. You have to send a lot of curriculums to different types of work, so you have more possibilities to get a job.

Another consideration that you have to know before you move, is the language of the country that you are moving to. If you speak that language is going to be easier but if you don't you can totally learn it there, going to classes and relating to people. It can be really hard but if you put a lot of effort on it, it's going to be okay.

In my opinion moving to another country is an amazing experience (if you are not forced to do it) that I would love to have, mostly because you meet new people, you have new adventures, and maybe you would learn a new language. But it would be hard to leave my family and friends, or the nervousness of not getting a job or not knowing someone. One of my dreams is moving to Seattle or New York, is truly far from Argentina and they are both from USA (English speaking country), I hope one day my dream will come true.
