When you finish high school, you have to decide between two difficult options: staying to study at the universities of your province or going to study in another country or province.

One of the advantages of staying here is that you have everything for free, for example: house, food and also the car of your parents. Although you don't have much freedom because you are in the house of your parents, but you know all the places, so that's not a problem for you. The other percentage of young people choose to go to study in another province or country, despite the fact it's a hard decision you acquire new experiences that you never lived before but, many students prefer to take that risk.

All things considered, there are pros and cons to staying or leaving. Personally, I believe it is better to go to study in another province because you learn to live alone, and take new experiences that can change your mind. I would go with a friend or someone I know, because I would be afraid to be alone in a place I don't know.
